Visiting the tower

Today the tower belongs to a foundation that opens it to the public in summer. The log books have been scanned, transcribed and indexed, and a small exhibition in the old oil store shows the lamp, the auger and a page from the winter of 1893. Tickets are sold at the oil store.

> Note: The stairs are steep and narrow; there are 132 steps to the lamp room.

Daily life followed the light. The lamp was trimmed at dusk and dawn, the lens polished every morning, and the brass fittings once a week whether they needed it or not. Supplies came by boat every second Thursday, weather permitting, which in February it rarely did.

> Warning: The gallery is closed in winds above 15 m/s.

Night tours
When the light was automated in 1968 the last keeper moved to a house in the village from which, on clear nights, he could see the beam sweep past his window every twelve seconds. He kept writing the log for another two years, out of habit.

> Most entries are short. Wind from the south-west, fresh; visibility good; two steamers northbound before midnight. But every few pages the keeper allowed himself a sentence more, and those sentences are the reason people still read the logs today.
